It is popularly believed that people are becoming learned and well-educated now, especially in the cultural sphere. In this sense some people are tend to go to the museums and galleries, while others prefer staying at home like a coach-potato.

Summarizing the data, two things should be taken into concern. To begin with, according to the information of natural history museum the number of people since 2013 has been getting lower. In my opinion, it deals with attitude of people who are most interested in history. Besides, the number of people in British Museum has raised from 2.6 mln to 5.6 mln. According to these significant changes people are fond of their city.

While making a comparisons between Natural History Museum and Science Museum I have found some similarities. In both of them the number of people does not expand take over 2 mln. Moreover, both of them introduced admission charges in 2014.

As far as I am concerned, I could give some recommendations. First of all, managers of museums and galleries should be very appealing and viewers should take them upon respectively. Secondly, the museums boards of directors should offer something to watch that draws on their background as an architectural historians and scientists. The last but not the least, they could do some attractions and moving types of several factories for kids.

Summing up, I would like to say that if the national museums and galleries would develop their work in some essential parts, the attendance would be raised.
